Permanent public access to Montana State Government publications

- We administer the state depository program for print and digital state publications
- We know that many state publications are published solely to the web.
- We know the web is not permanent.
- We need to “archive” the web.

Archive Montana

- Created in the Spring of 2007
- Had to get permission of state Information Technology Services Division
- Worked with ITSD to gather seeds
- Continue to work with agency web masters to allow access through Robots.txt

Archive Montana Collection

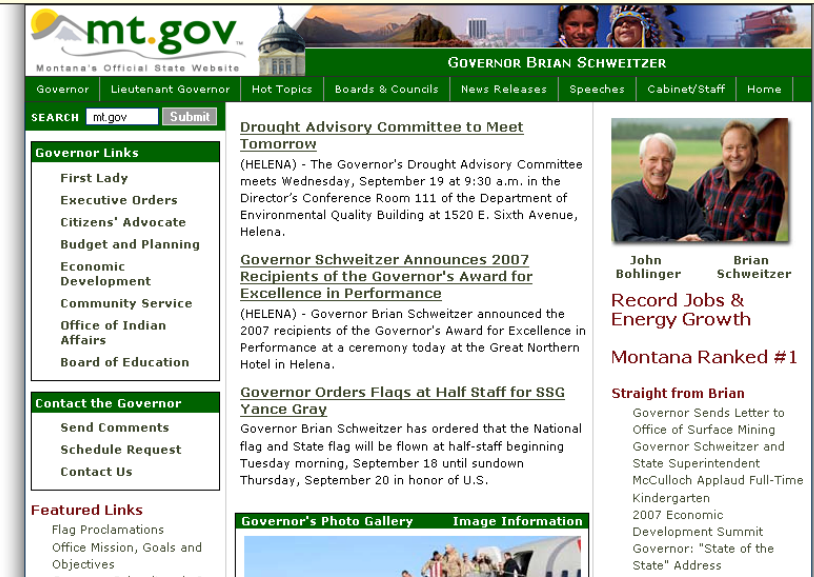

- Includes 127 seeds related to the mt.gov domain
- First crawled on July 1, 2007
- Crawled quarterly (frequency may increase)
- Currently adds about 600,000 archived web pages per crawl
- Earlier pages crawled by the Internet Archive dating to 1996 will be added this month

Archive Montana future

- Introduce web archive more widely
- Source for publications – should we cull our archive?
- Incorporate advanced search features, i.e. a thin index
- Archive Montana is scalable – should it grow?

State library to close its doors and go virtual | kxnet.com

(AP) The Montana State Library plans to close its doors at the start of the year and will instead be offering its resources over the Internet. ...

Library's digital change shouldn't go faster than public's

Great Falls Tribune, MT - Oct 17, 2007

We readily admit we've never darkened the door of the Montana State Library in Helena, and, based on recent reports, we're part of a vast majority of Montanans in that regard.

..."much of what the library offers already is, or soon will be, in digital form, library officials have announced their intention to go paperless, becoming a virtual library available on the Internet 24/7.

According to that draft plan, and unless something happens to stop a process that began more than four years ago, the digital train has left the station, and walk-in service at the library will cease.

But we can't quite get past our intuitive discomfort with the idea of a public library (which the state library most assuredly is) that isn't physically open to the public.

And the main reinforcement for our reservations comes from the fact that many Montanans still haven't embraced the digital age, for whatever reason.

Further, our experience with digital transitions — at the newspaper and in state government's checkered technological history — suggests the library's timetable is, to put it kindly, overly optimistic.

We're all for digital access. It's a wonderfully convenient, efficient thing.

But we worry that the timetable — basically giving the public, including the thousands who do not have computers, two months' notice — is too far ahead of Montana's technological curve.
